Bobby Melvin is a licensing manager for Texas A&M Technology Commercialization (TTC), primarily managing intellectual property related matters for Texas A&M University.

He is a former Army Judge Advocate General (JAG) lawyer and an experienced corporate business attorney. He enjoys working with start-ups and, prior to joining TTC, advised and served on the leadership teams and Boards of Directors for several businesses in Texas and Virginia, which he successfully helped build and operate. His corporate portfolio experience includes three software companies, two DoD manufacturing and technical services companies and an internet based logistics/supply company – all built on new technology arising out of public and/or private research programs. His extensive background in federal and commercial contracting, regulatory compliance and IP portfolio management assists greatly in the commercialization and protection of TAMUS' broad range of new and innovative technology.

In his spare time, Bobby likes playing with his three grandchildren in Katy and playing golf at the many local courses.
